125,000 ft waiver!

by Brent McNeely

The question is why? Geez, that is way up there; about 20 miles or so. And apparently some people are bringing rockets to push close to that limit.

Get ready, Delamar 96 is here! Word is out and rumor has it that we will have over 100 people in attendance to see the rockets scream into the sky. In order to make it an 'experimental launch', the club requesting that everyone fly K class motors or higher; basically we don't want to tie up the pads with normal rockets. This means every flight you will see will be worth watching. We are going for quality rather than quantity.

Also, there will be a night launch on Saturday night. Get ready to see a nice show of rockets red glare combined with strobes and glow sticks. The night launch will not have the 125k waiver, more like 3k (details at the launch site). Feel free to camp out on the lake bed or rent a room in Alamo (about 25 miles for the launch site). Oh, and watch out for the Land Shark!

Tripoli Las Vegas is on the Web

About a month ago I put the club online. The address is listed below. Visit the site and check out photos from past launches, upcoming launch dates and maps to the launch sites. We are also linked to most of the other Tripoli sites on the Web. Please let me know if there is something you would like put on the site; we'll take your suggestion to the leadership and see if we can get it online.

And, make sure you check out the Delamar 96 photos a few weeks after the launch. I'll put the best of the bunch online with an article about the launch.
